

Lymm Photographic Society

PRESS RELEASE

In mid-June, 15 members of the Lymm Photographic Society were lucky enough to spend a highly entertaining evening at the Gauntlet Birds of Prey Eagle and Vulture Park near Knutsford.

As one of their summer outings, the Society had organised an exclusive evening, to enable members to take photographs of various birds of prey, both in-flight and statically outdoors (and inside when the rain fell towards the end of the evening). Initially some members found it a challenge to photograph the more fast-flying birds but practice makes perfect, and as the evening went on, photographs improved, with members sharing learning tips and techniques amongst each other. The Gauntlet staff were superb in tailoring the experience specifically to the Society's requirements.

Amongst the birds photographed were Sebastian (a Golden Eagle), Lumpy (a Great Grey Owl), Wispa (a Kestrel) and Franklin (a Bald Eagle). Other birds that members were able to capture on film included American Black Vultures, African Hooded Vultures, a Tawny Owl, a Golden Eagle and a Peregrine/Lanner Falcon.

This was a unique experience which provided an opportunity to develop photographic skills and which gave members the chance to try out an aspect of photography slightly out of the ordinary. The Society will be looking at photographs taken at the outing in September and anyone is welcome to come along to that (or any) meeting.

The Lymm Photographic Society meets twice a month (except August), at 7.30pm Wednesday evening as in the Spread Eagle, in the centre of Lymm. Visitors and members of all abilities always welcome. See <http://www.lymmphotosoc.org.uk/> for more information.
